The church was crowded with society people, the costumes of the women bearing testimony to the present rage for black and white.

The bride's gown was of lace and tulle from which a train of charmeuse satin emerged. A lace veil was clasped to her head like a chapeau. The pillars and altar of the church, which is small but very smart, being the one Queen Isabella used to attend, were buried in flowers of white and green.

The witnesses for the bridegroom were the Comte de la Greze, who married Miss Eleanor H. Steele of New York, and M. de Lauriston, and for the bride her uncle, Maurice Bunau-Varilla and Admiral Fournier. Mile. Thys was the bridesmaid and Etienne Bunau-Varilla was the best man.

Two other but far more simple weddings were going on simultaneously in chapels adjoining the main alter and the dings were going on simultaneously in chapels adjoining the main alter and the guests, as often happens in France, assisted at all three ceremonies. Another feature of the marriage was the big collection taken up for the poor, which is always part of a French wedding. This was taken up by Mile. Deville Hermose and Baron Thiry.

The bride is an extremely pretty young woman and is well known among the younger set for her originality of character. She is one of the best of the women tennis players of France and has won prizes at the Racing Club tournaments She has much ability also as a painter and attends her atelier as regularly as a pro-
